

Struggling to Pick a Niche? This Giant List Will Help You Find a Winner

So you want to start a niche website—but you're stuck at square one: what's your niche?

It's one of the most common roadblocks for beginners. There are so many options out there that it's easy to feel paralyzed. And if you've ever felt like every good niche is already taken... you're not alone.

Here's the good news: You don't have to invent something brand new. There's already a giant, battle-tested list of niches out there—you just need to choose one and make it yours.

The Problem: Too Many Options, Not Enough Direction

When you're just getting started, picking a niche feels like a big commitment. You might be thinking:

- “What if I pick the wrong one?”
- “Can I compete in this space?”
- “Is this niche profitable enough to make money?”

Those are all fair questions, and they can stop you from ever launching your site.

But here's the reality: most successful niche sites started as imperfect ideas that got refined over time. The secret isn't picking the perfect niche. It's picking a niche—and running with it.

Choose a Niche That's Already Working or Just Post About Everything

Below, you will find a cleaned-up list of website categories taken directly from a major press release distribution service. Why does that matter? Because companies pay good money to promote themselves in these niches. It's a real-world validation of what's working in the market.

And, do what I did... post about everything, then see what sticks. Look at the data. I had a website with a generic title and I just started posting content about everything. Pretty soon, I saw a 3-4 niche keywords stick out with some traction (traffic), so I created entire websites about those niches. One of them did very well (close to $90k or so lifetime if I recall).

And that's kind of what I do now on my blog. I have a few topics I stick to like SEO, keywords, affiliate marketing, and web design, so those are staples and I have them in groups (blog categories), so that's safe. But, if I do a search and can't find a good answer right away, that's a cue to me that can maybe rank for that if I put out some good content, so I write about it. I figure, if anything, I've posted it as a reference for myself so that if I run into that problem again, I can go to my own website and find the solution. Simple.

A have a list of niches here where you'll find categories covering everything from health and tech to fashion, education, and farming. But, before looking at it, here are some things to keep in mind...

5 Smart Ways to Use This List to Pick Your Niche

1. Look for Personal Experience Matches

Start by finding niches that overlap with your life. Are you a parent? A hobbyist welder? A former accountant? You've already got a head start.

2. Check for Underserved Sub-niches

If a category like "Health" feels too broad, niche down. Think: "Men's Health After 40" or "Pet Allergies in Cats."

3. Think Evergreen vs. Trendy

Topics like insurance, parenting, and gardening will always be relevant. Others—like AI or crypto—can be fast-moving but lucrative.

4. Validate Demand

Use Google's autocomplete, keyword tools, Amazon searches, and affiliate networks to check if people are looking for content in your niche.

5. Run a 7-Day Interest Test

Try writing 3–5 headlines or short blog posts in a niche. If you enjoy it and have more ideas flowing, you're onto something. If not, move on.
